A Turkish Gunbant on the Danube Attacked by Four Russian Torpedo Bonts—The Skill and Coolness of the Turkish Com-

covered that the most effective way to count of the capture by the Russians of beat off an enemy's torpedo boats from the Te an irou-clad is to use torpedoes against Danub them. The Russians became aware of this new plan of their enemies upon attempting to destroy a Turkish monitor stationed near where the Aluta river flows into the Danube. It was while their troops were crossing the Danube. them. The Russians became aware of shelling their batteries and destroying their boats, it was deemed necessary to drive away the too active monster lest she should inflict infinitely greater damage by destroying the only bridge across the river. A correspondent of the London News describes the conflict which followed. The Russians built four torpedo boats, and their crews put the boats in ambush behind an island. When the monitor came steaming along out, the torpedo boats dashed upon her. To the surprise of the Russians, the Turkish sailors exhibited none of that confusion which usually characterizes them upon the sudden appearance of an enemy's vessel. Evidently they had a trained and cool commander. The crew quickly prepared the vessel for action, and then de fended her with a bravery and skill that won the admiration of the Russians, Her commander began his defense by thrusting out from the monitor torpedoes on the ends of long spears, thus threatening the boats with the danger of being blown into the air first; at the same time opening a terrific fire on them with small arms and a mitrailleuse. He moreover maneuvered his boat in a very skillful manner, and with such dexterity that with the torpedoes protecting the monitor, the Russian boats were unable to approach near enough to it to discharge their torpedoes. He besides tried to run the boats down, and nearly succeeded in doing so. The cause of this magnificent defense was soon apparent. The commander of the monitor was an European—the Russians thought him to be an Englishman; a tall man, with a long blonde beard. He stood on the deck of the monitor with his hands in his pockets, giving his orders in the coolest manner. The commanders of the torpedo boats continued their attempts to destroy the monitor for over an hour, flitting round the monitor and constantly seeking to get at her, but without success. The monitor was equally active in trying to run them dewn; avoiding a collision by quick movements, backing and advancing, turning, and plowing the water into foam as she pursued or avoided her tiny antagonists-a lion attacked by a rat, At one time a torpedo boat found itself between the monitor and the shore. The monitor instantly began backing down upon the boat with the intention of crushing it against the bank. Just at this moment the engineer of the lanuch was wounded. There was some delay in starting the engines, while the current carried her head around in such a position as to make escape apparently impossible. One of the crew sprang out into the shallow water and pushed the boat, and at the same moment the engines were started. The boat scraped the Russian officer had sprang ashore, and had emptied his revolver, firing at the exposed captain of the monitor. The captain Lually took off his hat and bowed, evidently not having been struck by a bullet. Later, however, the gallant man seems to have been killed or wound-

Scientific opinion in France is by no means unanimous as to the desirability of creating an inland sea in Algeria. after the project brought forward by Captain Roudaire, who has been strongly supported by M. de Lesseps, M. Dumas, the eminent chemist and M Daubree, have urged several objections to the scheme, and they agree with M. Naudin, who read a paper on the subject at the last meeting of the Academy of Sciences, that its sanitary effects would be deplorable. They are all three of opinion that to fill the shallow basins of the region which it is proposed to convert into a sea with salt water would be equivalent to reproducing in Algeria all the worst features of the Tuscan and Pontine marshes. Captain Roudaire admits that even in the center there would not be more than eighty feet of water, and the whole coast line would have so little water that it would be little better than a sand bank, with an admixture of salt and fresh water, upon which the strong solar light and tropical heat would act in the most deleterious manner for two-thirds of the year, causing a rapid decomposition of organic matter, and spreading contagion for miles in every direction. M. Naudin denies that there is any similarity between this district and Egypt, the climate of which country has been much improved by the creation of the Suez canal and the plantation of trees; for, according to him, while Egypt lies between two seas, and is traversed by an immense river, which has periodical overflows, the Algerian district is far from the sea and is bounded by arid deserts. M. Naudin believes that the real remedy for improving this, the worst region in Africa, will prove to be in the planting of trees-the Australian eucalyptus, if it can be made to grow, or, failing that, the ordinary trees and shrubs of the country.

Large Trees and Many Shingles.

Lunsford shingle mill, one mile north of Guerneville, California, has a capacity for running 26,000 shingles a day, and runs regularly. A tree that will make 20,000 feet of lumber will make 150,000 shingles. Such a tree would be eight feet in diameter and 160 feet in length to the limbs forming the top. Mr. Lunsford was one of the first settlers at or near Guerneville. He says the largest tree in the big bottom measured twentysix feet in diameter in the hollow. The largest solid tree was fifteen feet in diameter and forty-five feet in circumference, Mr. Beaver made 244,000 shingles out of a tree on Russian river bottom, opposite Guerneville. There is a tree at the mouth of Dutch Bill canyon, now which will make 400,000 shingles. It is skin, fifteen feet through, and was 170 feet to work to manufacture it into shingles.

FALL OF NIKOPOLIS.

The extensive swamp and lake west of Sistova interfered considerably with the Russian advance, although it afforded a decided protection against Turkish attack from that side. The Cossacks had been skirmishing and scouting for more than two days in the direction of Plevna and Nikopolis, and their operations and activity masked the preparations of the attacking column very effectually.

Finally the order for the Russian ad vance was given, and after an arduous march around the lake and toward Nikopolis the contending forces came into collision. The Turks had taken the precaution to cover their position by double lines of pickets, supported, at intervals, by several companies of picked troops. This was to guard against the raids of the Cossacks, whose enterprise has impressed itself thoroughly upon the Turksh mind. These lines of pickets made what might be termed a formal show of resistance, and slowly retired on the

As soon as the Russians came within effective range of the Turkish position they were met by a severe artillery fire, which, however, did not check their advance, and to which they replied with a still more formidable fire. The Turks being posted on a commanding position had a considerable advantage, and, as the Russians approached, frightful gaps were made in their ranks by the Turkish

With surprising valor, however, they continued to approach the heights, and they opened a terrible fire on the Turks. For half an hour this musketry duel continued with unabated vigor. The Russians, in the meantime, developed their front, so as to approach their left in the direction of the Osem river. This was a movement which threatened the Turkish line of retreat to the southwest-ward and westward. About midday on a Sunday the order Russian line, supported by several batwere started. The boat scraped the monitor, but escaped. Fight With a Heron.

A heron is a dangerous bird, even for man to attack, as will be seen from this story of an encounter between a man, a dog and a heron, published in the London Field. The heron had been wounded, its left wing being broken by a shot. The writer continues: I spied him in a large pool, some yards ly on a special mission.

from the river bank; seemingly, as he rested on the water, he was unhurt. As shouted out: "There he is, Sam!" the retriever plunged into the eddying pool and swam to seize his prey. Now the fight began.

Without swerving an inch, the heron with his crost erect, and with a scream, darted his formidable beak straight at the dog's eyes. Sam was puzzled. In moment, however, he was at him again, but the terrible beak of the heron, as the attack was again renewed, held him fairly at bay. Sam now changed his plan; he tried to circumvent his formidable enemy by wimming round to its back, but the heron presented a bold front at all points and once more Sam rushed in. The fight was getting fast and furious, but Sam, though considerably punished, stuck to his post, and, though repeatedly recalled, would not return without his bird.

There was nothing left to do but to kill the heron, to prevent his blinding the dog, if he had not already done so. Don't spoil the bird! I'll save the dog."

A TERRIBLE SECRET.

There is a story told in English green coms for the truth of which (writes Celia Logan in the New York Dispatch) cannot youch. It is to the effect that a certain carpenter, a long, long time ago, murdered his wife, by driving a nail into her skull. He fled, and, the better to conceal his identity, became an actor. He rose to eminence, and the whirling of time and the wheel of chance brought him to the very village in which s before he had killed his wife, whose owever-so the story run-had pected, her long, black hair eruel wound from which

"This"-He turned pale and staggered, for the skull had left on it one long lock of black hair. Handed to him upside down, the lock fell back, revealing a nail in the skull. The actor recognized it as that of the woman whom he had murdered just twenty-three years before. At this nute evidence of his guilt coming from the grave to confront him, the actor lost his presence of mind and his senses.

In his insane utterances he revealed his terrible secret, and was only saved from punishment by his fellow actors hushing him up and burrying him away. He never recovered his reason, and died in a madhouse, raving of the nail in the Irish Judges. No professional or official men in the world have so easy a time of it as the Irish judges. Value of Salt.

Not more than twenty-five years ago, a learned doctor published an elaborate treatise to prove that salt was the "forbidden fruit," through eating which our first parents fell, and has ever since been the cause of all our diseases and ills, though only a lunatic would deny that salt serves some important and es-sential uses in the animal economy. The desire for salt seems an instinct implanted in the animal creation, and there s a natural craving for it when it does not exist in sufficent quantity in food, Animals will travel long distances and brave great dangers to get at saline earths, called salt licks; horses and cows are most healthy when provided with umps of rock salt in their mangers or pastures, and even bees will sip a solution of salt with avidity. Men will barter gold for it in countries where it is scarce, and for it husbands will sell their and parents their children. In districts of Africa, salt is far more the purest white sugar in erence to west-ments. But existence of a greater or less appetite for salt in all individuals, shows that this substance serves more important functions than that of merely gratifying the human body, and forming about half the total weight of the saline matters of the blood, the constant loss of it by the secretions, the bile, and even tears, requires to be made up by its employment as a condiment. The free acid found in the stomach, and which forms an essential constituent of the gastric juice, is obviously derived from the salt taken with our food; and the soda of the blood and in some of the secretions is doubtless obtained from the decomposition in the system of common salt, which is the only mineral food of man and the only saline condiment essential to health,

Mu. H. R. Steynss:

Dear Sir-1 have been troubled with Scrofula, Canker, and Liver complaint for three years. Nothing ever did me any good until I commenced using the Veceting. I am now getting along first-rate, and still using the Veceting. I consider there is nothing equal to it for such complaints. Can heartily recommend it to everybody.
